

Alzheimer's Problem Statement

Author: Nazar Semko

Problem Statement:

● People struggling with Alzheimer's need assistance when traversing their area and maintaining some form of schedule when living without the assistance of a caregiver.

Who is experiencing the problem?

● People suffering from Alzheimer's and other memory impairing disorders. Their relatives also struggle as these people without the correct assistance can often find themselves lost leading to injuries or even death.

What is the problem?

● Those who suffer from memory impairing disorders are often at risk of injury if they are left without a proper caregiver or a family member who can monitor them.

Where does the problem present itself?

● The problem arises in any housing environments such as rural houses or large urban housing complexes. In extreme conditions these people often find themselves roaming the streets as well.

Why does it matter?

● Although these people have something impairing their daily lives this does not mean they do not deserve help and many don't have the time to constantly monitor them or the money to hire a specialist caregiver.
